DEDICATION

To the memory of John Anderson Lockette—gentleman, scholar, and teacher, we dedicate this volume with reverent esteem. He loved life and people: he did his tasks efficiently, and his ready wit and democratic spirit won for him friends who will not soon forget him.

He fought a good fight;
He finished the course;
He kept the faith;

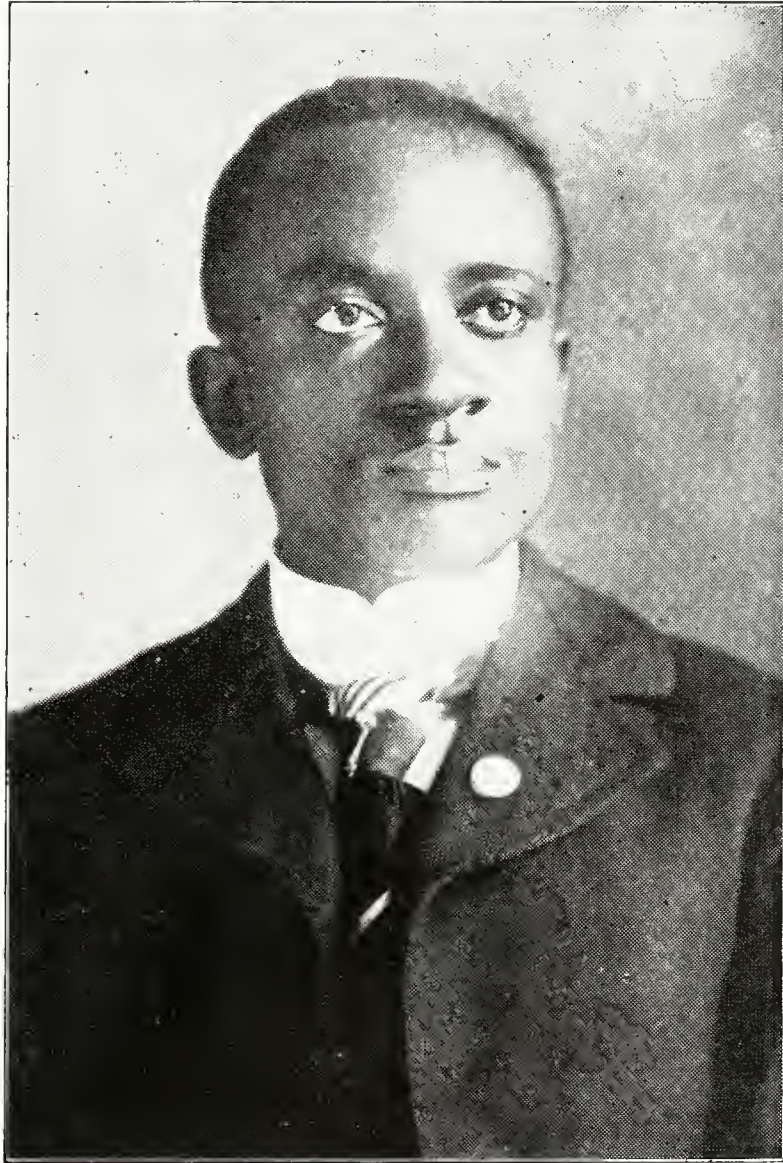

Foreward

To record facts, faces and fancies: to set an indelible stamp upon the past; and to perpetuate the present, we publish this second edition of our year book, "The Hubertonian." Through this medium we shall carry into the future tender memories of pleasant days spent within the walls of dear old Georgia State College.

Our heartfelt thanks go to Miss Janie L. Lester, who consented to the use of funds for the last edition of the "Georgia Herald" to help make this venture possible.

We wish also to express our sincere appreciation of the invaluable assistance and encouragement of our distinguished Class Advisor, Doctor A. H. Gordon — great teacher, profound scholar, and inspiring leader whose wise counsel and constructive criticisms have made The Hubertonian a much more successful venture than it would otherwise have been.

Class History

BY ANNIE EVANGELINE YOUNG

—All are architects of Fate,
Working in these walls of Time;
Some with massive deeds and great,
Some with ornaments of rhyme.—
—Longfellow.

On a certain September day in the year 1935, we, a group of high-school graduates, entered Georgia State Industrial College. We were given the task of guiding the stately Ship of Education over the rough waves of the Sea of Knowledge. With bent backs we gathered up the necessary equipment, then set sail for our destination.

The first year aboard the ship was spent in making programs of impression for the long journey ahead of us. A few of the passengers decided that they wanted to go back. The reason for their decision we'll never know; but back they went. The first stop made on the journey was at Sophomore Isle. Here we met Louise Lautier and Ralph Young and Paul Dixon who wanted to go with us to the Isle of Graduation. After assuring them that we were happy to have them in our midst, we continued our journey. Then things began to happen on board the ship. It was discovered that Leroy Bolden was talented for oratory; that Ladell Tiller, Miss Letha Tarver and Mr. Grover Eubanks were destined to become star basketball players; that Marjorie Pughsley was a great songster; that Johnnie Jordan could play a saxophone; that Marvin White, Charles Lyons and Alonza Ninons were members of the Collegiate Orchestra; that Annie Young and Louise Lautier had talent for writing. All of these things were discovered in one year! What did we do? Why we developed a program in honor of the school chairs. That's what we did. While Annie Young played soft, sweet music, Leroy Bolden in his resonant voice made a speech dedicated to the chair. Right at that moment a wireless came from our Guiding Star, President B. F. Hubert saying, "Sophomores, how are you coming?" Our Captain looked around from his helm and said, "Tell him we are rising." Shortly afterward we heard a terrible scream coming from the Chemistry Laboratory. Upon rushing there we found that Elizabeth Wells had been hurt. She was immediately put abed where she remained for quite a while. As the cloud covers up the sun, so this unfortunate accident covered up our trip to Junior Isle. However, the gale was weathered and we soon reached Junior Isle. Here we met Elizabeth Livingstone and Matthew Burke, Harvey Walden and George Hall. We asked them to join us, and this they did gladly. Then off we started for Senior Isle! A lusty voice was raised singing:

"Shipmates stand together, Don't give up the ship," and immediately the whole ship seemed to be singing. The trip to Senior Isle was indeed a glorious one. During this trip Leroy Bolden, prominent member of our crew, began training for the Abbot Sengstacke Oratorical Contest. Did he win first prize? You bet your boots he did. Whoever heard of a member of our class being defeated? These good sailors worked for scholarship. Our Captain, Edward Peterson, told us that we would have to entertain the inhabitants of Senior Isle, so we worked together for this gala affair and set the level for the Junior-Senior promenade. We reached the Isle safely where we were received by Mrs. A. M. Hall, Mrs. Mildred Johnson, Mrs. Hattie Reese, Miss Frankie Golden and Miss Robert Greyar. Soon after we set sail for the Isle of Graduation taking our hostesses with us. We arranged a number of programs for the entertainment of our guests, the Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors. Matthew Burke was chosen our Captain for the year. More diligent and conscientious workers than the Senior Sailors were not to be had. Under the leadership of Mr. Burke we made a few distinct achievements which will attest to the potentialities which for sometime lay dormant in this great body. Through our efforts we defeated the Juniors and Sophomores to crown Elizabeth Wells "Miss Georgia State College 38-39." We followed this up by reviving the Student Forum, and fostering a number of well-attended gatherings. We were also instrumental in designing and standardizing the college class jewelry. The fact that the group worked so well together does not say that there was no individual achievement. In every activity these stalwarts were standing out. In instrumental music, George Hall, Harvey Black and Annie Young distinguished themselves as did Marjorie Pughsley, Rufus Spenser, Roscoe Jones and Richard Bennett in vocal music. Nathaniel Mayes served for two years as assistant coach of girl's basketball, with Letha Tarver and Ladell Tiller becoming two of his star charges. Harvey Walden, Leroy Gordon, Samuel Byrd and Rutherford Lockettee became main-stays on the football aggregation. Leroy Bolden became editor-in-chief of the Georgia Herald. Annie Young, Louise Lautier, Nathaniel Mayes and Leroy Bolden became outstanding in Dramatics. The crowning achievement on the part of this noble crew was the publishing of the second edition of the "Hubertonian." Now it was learned that one of our lively passengers, Ladell Tiller, had been taken with a serious illness, and had to be sent home. Sad at heart were we, but sail on we must. A little tired and weary from our long journey, we docked at the Isle of Graduation where we collected our materials and passed off the ship. Proudly, if a little tearfully, looking at our stately Alma Mater, we recited in a body from Longfellow:

"Thou, too, Sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!"

Class Prophecy

BY FRANKIE N. GOLDEN

I was sitting in the senior class meeting about two weeks before commencement watching the different members come in and chat with each other, when all at once I began wondering just what these same young people would be doing fifteen years hence.

This thought preyed on my mind so heavily from day to day that I began to look around for some method by which one could get a good look into the future. I thought of the science department and decided to ask one of the professors in this field for help. After my Nature Study class one afternoon I mentioned the fact to Professor Winters who told me that he thought he could solve my problem. He said that he had been experimenting on such a drug for ten years and at last was confident that it would work, but he had been unable to get anyone to try it. Having much faith in Professor Winters as a scientist, I decided to try his plan.

The directions ran thus: After eating a good dinner, preferably one consisting of large servings of meat, potatoes, turnip greens, carrots, and apple pie or banana pudding—take one teaspoonful of the drug in a glass of clear water or other beverage and rest in a quiet place.

I went to the College Coop Shoppe at dinner hour the next day, and to my delight, Miss Jolly had pork chops and fish as meats, and all of the vegetables mentioned above. She had apple pie for dessert, but no banana pudding. To be sure the drug would work, I ordered two pork chops, one fish and the rest of the dinner, including the dessert. After eating this I went to B. J.'s. There I bought a coca-cola and three bananas. Putting the drug in the drink, I drank it, then ate the bananas. Next, I looked around for a quiet spot. This seemed impossible to find for a while. Suddenly I remembered the old basketball court at the edge of the marsh and hurried down there. I found a seat on an old log. Scarcely had I seated myself when a very peculiar feeling seized; and, all at once, everything went black.

I opened my eyes in the Grand Central Station in Chicago. I was about to leave the pullman coach when the pullman porter approached me. He seemed very familiar. He was well groomed and weighed about 250 pounds. He smiled. Then I remembered. It was Nathaniel Mayes. He said that he had tired of trying to teach Shakespeare in Georgia and had decided to get in the money. From all appearances he was quite successful. I asked him about other members of the class of '39 and to my surprise and delight, several of them, he said, were right here in Chicago.

Louise Lautier, after getting her master's degree from Atlanta University, thought that she knew too much to marry and settle down to the tiresome life of a housewife; and, as her ideas always clashed with those of the principals under whom she worked, she had accepted a position as secretary to the president of The Bank.

Robert McClinton, now happily married to Mary Luten with three children, was proprietor of a wholesale Ladies' Ready-to-Wear store. Associated with him was Charles Lyons, a bachelor.

Emory Jordan was so impressed with a study made of the Meddin Brothers Wholesale Meat Dealers while a senior at Georgia State, that he had wandered to Chicago and was now head of the butchering at a big packing house. He had done so well in this position that he influenced Charles Maddox to come to Chicago and work with him.

L. Robert Bolden was making a hit as the Great Lochinvar of the Air. I understood that he wrote all of his compositions and was quite a success. Every night many, many old maids of Chicago turned in to hear his consoling voice and words of love.

Mays told me that Rutherford Lockette was teaching English at Georgia State College, after having received his master's degree in this field at Ohio State University.

Mattie Tharpe, wife of Isadore Moore, was everything a man could wish in a wife. She was the charming mother of five children. The Moore's were living in Waycross where Isadore is principal.

This was too much for me so I decided to hurry to my hotel and think things over. Mayes told me if I waited until he changed his clothes, he would run me over in his car. Agreeing to this, I settled down in the station to read the paper. Hearing a familiar voice, I glanced up from the paper. Whom should it be but Leon Young. He looked very prosperous, wearing nose glasses and spats and carrying a walking cane. Our eyes met and Leon came over to speak with me. He said that he was a criminal lawyer and referred to an article in the paper I held in my hand. It was headed: LEON YOUNG WINS DALLAS CASE. As I read the article, I learned that this case had aroused much interest in Chicago for sometime and that Leon had won it on a technicality.

I asked about the other member of the class and was informed that Pauline Howell had been recently appointed Art Instructor at Georgia State College, successor to Mrs. Washington who had retired.

Leathe Tarver was basketball coach at Elder High School, Sandersville, Georgia, and Leslie Calhoun was teaching Home Economics in her home town.

After bidding me adieu, Leon went on his way. The next thing I knew I was in New York City. It seemed that I was perplexed to how I got away from Mayes, but before I could reason this out, I saw a young woman coming down the street with about fifteen little girls. She was scolding them for running out in the street in front of cars. As she came near me, I saw that it was Johnnye Jordan. She told me that she was matron of a girls' orphanage and that she was carrying the children to the park for exercise. I asked her why she happened to be doing this kind of work whereupon she told me the whole story. . . . She had been engaged to a handsome young man and was jilted, which happening caused her to conclude that men couldn't be trusted, so she had decided to devote the rest of her life to charity.

After leaving Johnnye, I walked down Seventh Avenue. I came upon a theatre with several large signs in huge print. My attention was caught by one which read: ADDED ATTRACTION — COMING — BETTE WELLS AND HER SEPIA FROLICKERS. Something in the name interested me.—Wells. Could it be Elizabeth Wells of the class of '39? While thus wondering, who stepped out of the theatre with a long cigar in his mouth but McJoseph Horton. He assured me that Bette Wells was none other than our own little modest Elizabeth Wells. He said that he had made a handsome sum of money as her manager, and that he was making final arrangements for the performance. Along with Miss Wells were Annie Young, Mary Beaton and Susie Joseph. All of these girls had decided that teaching wasn't quite as thrilling as they had hoped and that they had decided to follow the carefree life of the stage.

He also informed me that Nellie Simmons, (now Mrs. Joshua Johnson) creator of styles,—on Seventh Avenue and 125 Street—designed all costumes for the group; and that Alonzo Ninons was leader of a band at the Cotton Club, making a good substitute for the late Cab Calloway. Rufus Spencer was the soloist for the band.

Before I could digest these facts, I found myself in Atlanta, Georgia, running down Auburn Avenue dodging a swiftly moving ambulance. When the ambulance reached me, it came to a sudden stop. Looking into the driver's seat, I recognized Millard McWhorter. He said that there had been a terrible accident in which two cars were completely demolished and one man killed. He had gone to the scene in hopes of getting the body only to find that the man had been taken to the undertaker's already. He was rushing back to see if it was his place to which the man had been carried, but he assured me, business meant nothing to him when it came to a chance to chat with an old class mate. During the course of our conversation, I learned that Nancy Pruitt was singing nightly at the "81 Theatre." Joseph Flagg, George Hall, and John B. Jackson had done so well with beautification work at their respective schools in small towns in Georgia, that they had formed a partnership, the business of which was cutting and caring for lawns and general home beautification. They had done quite well with this business, having now complete charge of the care and up-keep of most of Atlanta homes and buildings.

After inviting me around to his home, McWhorter hurried on. I walked on down the Avenue and turned, but instead of being in Atlanta, I found myself in Fort Valley at the Fort Valley College of Arts and Sciences talking with Grover Eubanks, now acting president of the institution. He said that the president had worked so hard trying to develop Fort Valley that it had given him a nervous break-down. Eubanks had changed so much. He had grown a long goatee and was very immaculate from head to foot.

While I was talking with Eubanks, Harvey Walden, football coach, came in to get a contract signed. It was a guarantee for a game between Fort Valley and South Carolina State College. They took pride in stating that their team had won two games that year. They had been losing all games heretofore.

Eubanks urged me to stay for a Field Day program which was only a few hours off. All teachers in each community in the county were to be present. I decided to stay. While watching the crowd gather, a car drove up and stopped close by me. A very neatly dressed woman, about middle-aged, got out. She seemed very familiar, but I couldn't place her. As she came nearer, I saw that it was Mrs. A. M. Hall, but her hair was white and she was quite a bit stouter. She noticed my looking at her hair and hurried to explain that she had worried so much in trying to make a successful Jeanes Supervisor in her county. She said she had come over to the Field Day program in order to get some points for her's next year.

Mrs. Hall and I walked around the campus chatting when we came upon two other familiar people. They proved to be Paul Dixon and Robert Greyer, now Mr. and Mrs. They were teaching in a two-teacher school about six miles from Fort Valley.

The bell rang for the assemble and the four of us entered the auditorium. There were several people seated on the rostrum—business men, doctors, and teachers. Among this group were Matthew Burke and Nathaniel Morris. Dixon told us that Mr. Burke was manager of the Pilgrim Health Insurance Company of Augusta and Mr. Morris was teacher of science in a consolidated school in Peach County.

While sitting there thinking over all that I had seen, I became very hungry, and strange as it may seem, I found myself in Savannah on West Broad Street. I saw Harvey Black standing in the door of a very attractive shop. He told me that he was owner and operator of this outstanding cleaning and pressing club and in connection with it was a tailor shop run by Elizabeth Livingston.

As Harvey and I were chatting about things that had happened since our graduation in 1939, Elizabeth came out of the store. She said she had watched our group buy suits from others so long that she thought she would try her hand. I learned that she was very successful at making ladies' tailored suits.

Elizabeth said that Mabel Perry was teaching at West Broad Street School, and Mabel Young was teaching an adult class at the Cuyler Night School, having tired of little children who asked so many questions she couldn't answer.

Ruth Dudley was conducting an experiment on Commercial Frog Breeding. Quite a bit of money was being made from frogs as people were eating them now instead of chicken.

Ralph (Polly) Young was doing well as a teacher of Home Economics at the Savannah Boys' Club. This Club was now quite a school for delinquent boys.

Marion Heath had succeeded Mr. B. S. Adams as County Agent of Chatham County.

James Lutten, having married Minnie Fred Wright, was working in Athens, Georgia—Minnie Fred's home town.

It seemed that I heard a chorus singing—I awoke to find a group of W. P. A. women singing as they raked the leaves near me. Looking at my watch, I saw that it was five minutes past time for Professor Gordon's class, but I simply had to cut in order to record this experience.

The End.
